

Nabokov's Butterflies: Unpublished and Uncollected Writings

A64

Brian Boyd, one of the editors of Nabokov's Butterflies, wrote in his introduction, "Nabokov, Literature, Lepidoptera", that one incentive for the 800-page compilation of how lepidopterology touched Nabokov's writing and his life, was to present unpublished or inaccessible Nabokov material to the interested reader. Other reasons: to allow us a peek into his passion; to "offer old passages that reveal new colors" in his entomological world; to let us "track the development of the writer's art, the evolution of the naturalist's science, and the interplay between the two"; to show us the variety of his works and the "range of Nabokov's styles, strategies, contexts, and mental modes".

So, this is a collection of artifacts from the three worlds of Nabokov's life: the scientific, the artistic, and the personal. Where they met and where they interbred. This is also the one place in which all of Nabokov's scientific works on lepidoptera (most in full) are readily available.
